3. Our services and authorisations

Under AFSL 560782, NexPay is authorised to provide general financial product advice and to deal in (issue, apply for, acquire, vary or dispose of, and arrange) non-cash payment facilities, to retail and wholesale clients. This includes cross-border payments, domestic and international transfers, payment collection, and payment splitting and onward remittance to education providers and agencies.

4. How to contact us

General enquiries: support@nexpay.com.au. Complaints: complaints@nexpay.com.au. Our postal and street address is in section 2.

5. Before you use our services

Before using our payment services you should review this FSG, our PDS and our Terms & Conditions. By creating an account or submitting a payment instruction, you agree to the Terms & Conditions and accept the product features and risks described in the PDS.

6. Fees, costs and other benefits

6.1 Fees we charge

NexPay does not typically charge a separate transfer fee when funds are deposited via our local collection accounts. You may incur a foreign-exchange margin (the difference between the wholesale FX rate and the rate we offer you), fees charged by your own bank, and fees charged by intermediary or receiving banks depending on the payment route. The applicable exchange rate, our fee and the amount the recipient will receive are disclosed to you before you confirm a payment. Full details of costs and margins are in our PDS.

6.2 How NexPay is remunerated

NexPay earns revenue primarily through the foreign-exchange margin applied to currency conversions. We may also pay or receive commissions or rebates to or from authorised partners or education agencies under commercial agreements. These arrangements do not increase the price you pay for our services. More information is available on request.

6.3 How our staff are paid

Our employees and representatives receive fixed salaries and may receive performance-based bonuses. They do not receive commissions directly linked to the financial products provided to you.

7. Associations and conflicts of interest

NexPay is part of an international group of related entities, and some services may be delivered in cooperation with Nexpay Limited (UK), Nexpay Canada Inc., other NexPay group entities, and local payment partners and correspondent banks. These relationships may involve commercial agreements, including fee sharing or commissions. NexPay manages conflicts of interest in accordance with its AFSL obligations and internal policies. More information is available on request.
